Even before the 1970 season, Marshall University's football program had experienced some difficulties. The team had a poor record in the 1960s, including seasons without winning games. In 1962, his stadium was convicted of health and safety violations. In 1969, the Central American Conference expelled Marshall from its ranks for recruiting offenses. At the time of the accident, Marshall was part of the National Association of Athletics Federations (NCAA), but was under probation for the same allegations. Until 1970, Fairfield Stadium underwent a complete refurbishment and there was a fresh Astroturf on the pitch. Although 1970 was not a winning season, the team's last game against East Carolina University was tight. Marshall lost with 14:17. The crash affected both the University and the surrounding community. After the crash, government offices and local businesses were closed. The university cancelled many activities and held a memorial service at the stadium on Sunday November 15th. She also cancelled classes on Monday. Funeral and memorial services were held over the coming weeks. The bodies of six football players who could not be identified were buried together at Spring Hill Cemetery, which overlooks marshall's campus. On March 17, 1971, Jack Lengyel became Marshall University's new football coach. Assistant coach Red Dawson, who returned to West Virginia by car, returned to train for a year. With the help of other surviving faculty members and staff, they began assembling a new football team. They started with players who were not on the flight due to injuries, academic conflicts and other reasons. They added athletes to these players who played other sports. The school also requested permission from the NCAA to allow freshmen to play, which the NCAA approved. Lengyel re-named the Young Thundering Herd team until it regained its original 4-year-old class structure. Young Thundering Herd lost his first game, which was against Morehead. But she won her second game – her first home game – against Xavier University with a 15-13 record. The team won another game in the 1971 season. Thundering Herd started winning in 1994. Marshall played in the NCAA Division I-AA playoffs in 1987 and won the Southern Conference football championship in 1988, 1992 and 1996. The team moved to Division I-A in 1997. The annual commemoration is being held in the fountain of the Memorial Student Center, which is dedicated to the 12th anniversary of the 1994-1995 war. After this ceremony, the school excludes water on until spring. Whether you're a veteran in the coaching world or just starting to coach your son's city league football team, here are some tips to help make the experience enjoyable for you and your future stars. Jamie Garbutt / Getty Images Football is a game, it's not life. While there are wonderful life lessons to learn from the game, we as coaches cannot be so preoccupied with pummeling opponents that we forget this important principle. In youth football you were successful as a coach if you made the game so fun that the kids want to play it again next year. This can mean playing Johnny Slow Shoes while offering a prayer that they don't run their way. It may seem like winning is more fun than losing, but winning isn't the most important thing. Fun is the most important thing. Tim Clayton - Corbis / Getty Images The best footballers of today learned the basics of the game years ago. This is in our job description of youth football coaches. We can't give our kids a 100-page book and expect to remember it in a six-week season. Simplify. Learn. This game gets more complicated the older they get. Take the time to focus on the basics and teach them how to do well how to catch a football and how to make a solid tackle. Set them up for success in a future football career by laying a solid foundation now. Thomas Barwick / Getty Images We are privileged to have a role to play in shaping some young people, and we need to take that responsibility seriously. Our kids should be the one interrupting fights at school, not starting them. Our children should be the ones leading by example with their grades, effort and enthusiasm. If we expect him to lead by example, it starts with us. That doesn't mean they have to get together after every show and do Kumbaya. We can encourage good sports behavior and physical intensity in the same way. We like to see players go as far as they can between whistles, and after the show, they help each other and come back to do it again. Thomas Barwick / Getty Images Football has always been a physical game, with many injuries, and injuries are a normal part of most sports. However, football's reputation has deteriorated recently with research and media scabies about concussions in football. Can't we, as a general body of good coaches, do our part now before we have mandates to train and security audit our practices? Do we really need to do bull exercises in the ring with our 10-year-olds? Again, our goals are to make sure they come back to play the game, have fun, and grow up to be good people. Some injuries can be avoided. Thomas Barwick / Getty Images Many of us mention our youth or high school football coach when we talk about who made a big impact on our lives. Look beyond the traffic lights. You have parents, neighbors, aunts and uncles involved (for better or for worse). You have Johnny's little brother, who's actually quick and physical, and he might one day play for your team if Johnny has fun with it. It's not just about the game of football, it's about relationships. 6 team city league you're a part of may not seem like much, but it's an opportunity. Retired NFL Hall of Fame quarterback Joe Montana has revealed how his new game, Joe Montana Football 16, is developing in Unreal Engine 4. The new title will arrive on unnamed platforms nearly 25 years after the first Joe Montana Football came out for Sega Genesis. He just got Unreal @unrealengine #joemontanafootball16 pic.twitter.com/y0WwWfM0 — Joseph Montana (@JoeMontana) March 17, 2015 Accompanying screenshot lack of recognizable branding suggests that the game is not licensed by the NFL and the NFL Players Association, and so there will be no real NFL teams or current players. That's likely because of electronic arts' exclusive licensing agreement with the NFL and NFLPA, which was retained despite a 2008 antitrust lawsuit. The arrangement does not cover past NFL players, who could potentially be licensed to play if Montana is to lean against the nostalgia factor that bears his name. He first teased the game in July 2014 with a tweet featuring a picture of him in a generic jersey with the hashtags #youvewaitedlongenough and #joemontanafootball16. He added in October with another tweet that included a gif of Montana in a motion capture session along with hashtags #morethanarosterupdate and #montana16. The first relates to a common complaint among sports game fans that annual iterations often feel like nothing more than updating the current roster without changing the game in any essential way otherwise. The original Joe Montana Football commissioned Sega in 1989 to build a portfolio of recognizable games for the new Sega Genesis console. EA's Park Place Productions, which has just been developed by the iconic John Madden Football, took over the project, which was announced in January 1991. Unlike Madden's realistic game and accurate rosters, Joe Montana Football featured only Montana and a list of fictional players and generic teams with a simpler, arcade style of play. The moderate success of the original game led to four sequels, developed by BlueSky Software, which is known for creating a number of other Genesis classics such as Vectorman and Shadowrun. The last game produced with Montana was NFL '95, followed by similar releases in which Deion Sanders guested. Joe Montana, better known as Joe Cool or The Comeback Kid, began his NFL career in 1979. He played for the San Francisco 49ers for 14 seasons (and 2 more for the Kansas City Chiefs), winning four Super Bowls and earning the distinction of being named Superbowl MVP three times. He was elected to the Pro Football Hall of Fame in 2000. Editor's recommendations
